

THE GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE & ACCOUNTABILITY ACT

WHO WAS CONSULTED

In the last year, California Forward has talked with voters, taxpayers, and community leaders from across the state about what they think is ailing California. The same themes have continued to emerge again and again: The governance system is broken. Public agencies lack a focus on results. They are not transparent or accountable. And the whole system is too complex. Californians agree that to improve results, this basic problem must be solved.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT TASK FORCE: In the fall of 2010, California Forward convened a workgroup of local government leaders to begin developing a set of options for taking on this challenge. A group of current and former city and county officials on what became known as the Local Government Task Force developed a set of principles that have served as the foundation of California Forward's approach. These principles also served as the guide for the initial draft of the Framework, a strategic action plan for improving the relationship between California's state and local governments:

- Public programs should work collaboratively with a focus on shared outcomes. These outcomes should guide policy development, management decisions, and ultimately, accountability, through public reporting of results.
- Fiscal control is essential if local governments are going to be empowered to integrate services, innovate, develop better practices, and achieve economies of scale.
- Regional collaboration can make many services more efficient and effective by allowing local governments to meet large-scale challenges by working together across jurisdictions.

SACRAMENTO STAKEHOLDER ROUNDTABLES: After the initial work of the Local Government Task Force, California Forward hosted a series of Stakeholder Roundtables in Sacramento in the winter of 2011 to refine its proposals. In a series of five collaborative meetings moderated by California Forward's Sunne Wright McPeak, a committed group of stakeholders and experts in education, local government, health and human services, economic development, and labor provided detailed feedback on the Framework. They also offered suggestions for improving its draft proposals. After each meeting, the Framework was revised and refined to incorporate stakeholders' suggestions.

SPEAK UP CALIFORNIA: At the same time the Stakeholder Roundtable meetings were being held in Sacramento, California Forward led a statewide conversation called "Speak Up California" focusing on the challenges of restructuring. In more than 70 meetings across California through the winter and spring of 2011, groups of civic leaders, business leaders, non-profit advocates, elected officials, and other interested citizens came together to discuss how to reform California's government.

REGIONAL STAKEHOLDER ROUNDTABLES: California Forward next convened a series of Regional Stakeholder Roundtables in San Diego, Los Angeles, the Inland Empire, the Central Valley, and the Bay Area. Local elected officials and leaders from business, labor, and the nonprofit sector participated. The input from all of these meetings also helped shape the Framework and its draft proposals.
